'London's Lost Route to the Sea' is a path full of history and diversity in environments from city centres to rural countryside and from fully navigable waterways to canals that have completely disappeared. The route starts at Threadneedle Street in the City of London outside the Bank of England and follows the Thames to Weybridge, where the route then heads south following the canals to the ...

local cycle routes. Their hopes were dashed when the Mayor refused funding. Getting more Londoners onto bikes could save the suburbs from a congestion nightmare. And there are other benefits. A cycle ride is an easy way to fit enjoyable exercise into the day. Fewer cars on the roads would cut pollution. Cycling is a win-win for London. But while the outer boroughs are ripe for a biking boom ...
